THE ODERBRUCH
PEOPLE MAKING LANDSCAPE

Ever since the drainages that were started in the 18th century under the Prussian crown, the Oderbruch has developed into one of Europe's most interesting micro-landscapes. This region, the largest settled polder in Germany, is distinguished by a characteristic rural culture, a unique water system and a high density of architectural landmarks.

The designated cultural heritage sites that shape the experience of this cultural heritage landscape include local history parlours and village museums, archaeological and architectural monuments, pumping stations, water and windmills, churches or farms. These locations are presented in a miniature exhibition in the Oderbruch Museum Altranft, inviting you to travel through the Oderbruch, to get to know and understand this fascinating region.

With the "Explore the Oderbruch" brochure, you can plan your individual excursions to the cultural heritage sites. The accompanying side notes provide additional recommendations for cultural and culinary stops. The locations do not always have fixed opening hours; some are open to the public, while others are organised by private individuals who must be contacted in advance. The rich diversity of our cultural heritage sites is what makes up the special appeal of the Oderbruch.

We wish you an exciting journey!

The Niederfinow ship lift, inaugurated in 1934, is the oldest one of its kind still in operation in Germany. Alongside of it, however, a new and larger lift has already been built, which is scheduled to be operational in 2022. Both lifts, the four-step lock and the Lieper lock with the adjacent Finow canal, are testimony to 400 years of hydraulic engineering history at the edge of the Oderbruch. Over a hundred thousand visitors visit the enormous ship elevator every year.

This is Brandenburg's oldest museum of technology. The focus of its exhibitions and large museum park is on inland shipping in the Oder region. The museum also provides general tourist information and is otherwise an ideal place for the planning of further excursions. An industrial heritage trail stretches alongside the oldest artificial waterway in Germany – the Finowkanal.

You can continue your journey by canoe after renting from Kanu Verleih Oderberg, or you can travel as a passenger on one of the boats of the Fahrgastschiffahrt Oderberg.

The Heimatstube Hohensaaten explores the traces of the fishing, shipping and agriculture trades that once characterised the village. Approaching from the south, the lock systems “Ostschleuse” and “Westschleuse” are impressive landmarks. This is where the Wriezener Alte Oder connects with the Stromoder. In the town centre, visitors will find the restored church, built in neo-Gothic style according to the plans of the Royal Master Builder August Stüler. After a bike ride of five kilometres north along the Oder, you reach the national park “Unteres Odertal”.

You have to look very carefully to see the orb on the church steeple. The welded metal sphere contains old documents pertaining to the church, which was built in 1770 as a colonist church on royal land. On the square south of the church is the tomb of Louis Henri Fontane, father of Theodor Fontane. From here you can enjoy the wonderful views across the Oderbruch. In addition to church services, each year the church hosts the event series »Zur schönen Kirche« (‘‘At the Beautiful Church’’), which features choir concerts, readings and theatre performances.

The exhibition in the small half-timbered house at the entrance to the village of Schiffmühle is shaped by memories of the father of the poet Theodor Fontane, Louis Henri Fontane. The exhibition also teaches visitors about the history of the village of Schiffmühle, from its founding in the 18th century until the end of the GDR period. The small museum with adjoining café and water playground also invites guests to spend time in the garden. In nearby Bralitz you can book a raft tour on the Alte Oder with Odertours.

PUMPING STATION NEUTORNOW

Neutornow,
across from No. 67

The flood pumping station in Neutornow, built in 1895, was converted to electrical operations in 1968. With its brick-faced masonry, it reflects the architecture of building period and is regarded as an important technical and historical landmark to flood protection in the Oderbruch. The adjoining residential building of the master pumping station operators provides a striking impression of how the station once operated. Additional flood pumping stations for the Oderbruch can be found in Bad Freienwalde on the Freienwalder Landgraben, which is opposite the train station and in Liepe.

The idyllic Malche valley is a place where people can find relaxation for body, mind and soul. In a Bible house founded in 1898, women were prepared for missionary and deaconry work in the Orient. After 1945, the Malche became a training centre for community education for the Protestant Church.

The Malche now serves as a guest and conference centre with a diverse annual programme. The signposted tour explains the history of the historical site. A large old orchard and the adjacent stream and meadows lead you to nearby hiking trails and lookout towers.

The Haus der Naturpflege (House of Nature Conservation) is a nature conservation museum dedicated to the particular philosophy and worldview of Kurt Kretschmann (1914–2007) and his wife Erna (1912–2001). The surrounding show and educational garden highlights various landscape and garden types. Children and young people can take part in a wide range of environmental education offers. From here you can set out on wonderful hikes in the Bad Freienwalde area or visit the Rathsdorf stork tower – a brick kiln between Bad Freienwalde and Wriezen that provides information about habitat and behaviour of the white stork.

Bad Freienwalde is the oldest spa and bath resort in Mark Brandenburg – and the Oderlandmuseum is Brandenburg's oldest regional museum. Its permanent exhibition introduces the main aspects of the drainage of the Oderbruch and highlights the history of the spa and bath resort. Bad Freienwalde also serves as an ideal point of departure for extensive hikes in the area. Further information is available from the adjacent tourist information centre of Bad Freienwalde.

Altranft is the showcase of the Oderbruch, with its unique water system, its inhabitants and distinct rural culture. The exhibition tour begins in Schloss Altranft, a 19th-century manor house in the middle of a 19th century landscaped park. The special topography of the Oderbruch is presented by Antje Scholz in her web installation that represents the water routes of the Oder and the over 1000-kilometre system of irrigation ditches. A large marble track allows visitors to playfully explore the flowing course of the water. Photos of inhabitants of the Oderbruch, films and audio installations appeal to all the senses.

Wriezen is one of the few cities of the Oderbruch and is perhaps the location most closely linked to the history of this unique landscape. The tower of the oldest building, the Marienkirche, is a widely visible landmark for the inhabitants of the Oderbruch. The destroyed parts of the church are currently under restoration.

Located directly in front of the church is a market fountain created by the sculptor Horst Engelhardt (1951–2014). The partly provocative statements chosen for the fountain had generated discussion in the area and beyond.

Prior to the drainage of the area in the middle of the 18th century, Wriezen was the uncontested capital of the Oderbruch. Goods were shipped from this port to Silesia and Pomerania, Poland and all of Prussia. The taxes from fish sales and barge traffic filled the city coffers. Historic buildings at the former port, such as the lime kiln, the manufacturer's villa, the port warehouse and the dairy, still serve as prominent reminders of this chapter of the city's history. The support association "Interessengemeinschaft Hafen Wriezen e.V." shows an extensive collection of historical photographs in the lime kiln.

The Chamisso Museum is dedicated to the German-French poet, naturalist and world traveller Adelbert von Chamisso (1781–1838).

In the summer of 1813 he was a guest at the former Kunersdorf Castle, where he wrote the fairy tale novel “Peter Schlemihls wundersame Geschichte”, which is considered a work of world literature. Between 1815 and 1818 he embarked on a three-year trip around the world. His biography is inspiring and unique at the same time. Immediately adjacent to the museum are the Kunersdorf church, the cemetery colonnade, a burial site of nobility and significant European works of art.

The Thaer exhibition introduces visitors to the influential Prussian agricultural reformer Albrecht Daniel Thaer (1752–1828), who maintained an important agricultural science model farm in Möglin, where he researched, experimented with and documented the principles of rational agriculture. His work had a direct impact on the agricultural development of the Oderbruch. Across from the exhibition venue you will find the 400-year-old mansion where Thaer lived, and the park with his burial site as well as a bust from the year 1978.

Altwriezen is one of four old fishing villages in northern Oderbruch. The half-timbered church was once the village landmark. However, it was demolished in 1973 because the congregation did not have the resources to repair it. A support association is now raising money to rebuild it, beginning with the bell tower. You can find more information about this project on the association's website. From May to September the Ersatzkirche, or substitute church, is open every first Sunday of the month from 2 pm to 5 pm. Serving coffee and homemade cake, the association invites you to stop by for a visit and chat.

In 1789, farming families from Altwustrow built their own church without royal consent. From the outside, the half-timbered building looks rather modest. Inside the church, visitors can admire the baroque pews and the pulpit altar, as well as a paper ceiling that is unique in all of northern Germany. Each year, the church and the attractive village ensemble draw scores of visitors to the former fishing village. A signposted tour of the village informs visitors about the life of the colonists. Each September, the whole village hosts a Colonists’ Day. Visitors can enjoy homemade cake in the Kolonisten-Kaffee, or colonist coffee shop. The old village pub »Zum Feuchten Willi« puts on live concerts for visitors and locals alike. The sculpture is accessible to the public.

A large sculpture of the river god Viadrus stands in the floodplain near Güstebieser Loose. It greets and bids farewell to travellers crossing the river on the German-Polish ferry. The sculpture is the work of sculptor Horst Engelhardt (1951-2014) and stands here as a symbol of the new European Oder. "Vivat Viadrus!"

By taking the short ferry ride, visitors can continue their excursion on the Polish side of the Oder. The landscape park near Cedynia offers wonderful vantage points over the Oder valley. A museum in Gozdowice provides information about the operations of the Polish and Russian armies in the spring of 1945.

Visitors to the Heimatstube Neulewin can learn how a day labourer's family would have gotten by in everyday life. The house was built in 1885 as a home for two day labourer families. It also showcases many objects pertaining to the local history of Neulewin. The local history association, founded in 1996, still operates the house, manages the opening hours and organises guided tours to teach visitors about the history of village and region.

The Neubarnim Lindenallee is the landmark of the colonist village, which was built between 1754 and 1756 as an “Angerdorf”, a village situated around the village green. It is the longest avenue of linden trees in all of Brandenburg. The Lindenfest festival, which takes place during the summer, enjoys popularity well beyond the village itself.

The avenue takes you past two double-storey half-timbered houses that are listed as historical monuments, as well as one of the last so-called “quarrel houses”, semi-detached houses in which quarrels are said to have frequently broken out in the common “black kitchen”.

This small cemetery is located at the northern edge of the town of Groß Neuendorf, and its uninterrupted perimeter wall and menorah-adorned gate make it hard to miss. The synagogue, which was built adjacent to a simple residential building, is another testimony to Jewish life in the Oderbruch. The bricked-up pointed arches of the windows and a sign help to identify the building.

The restored harbour facility right on the Oder can be considered the town's landmark, an outstanding embodiment of its now 650-year local history, which from earliest times has been shaped by the trade of goods along the Oder. From here you can cycle southwards or northwards along the Oder. The tower café located on the lower floor of the loading tower, invites you to enjoy coffee and cake with a view of the Polish side of the Oder.

In the early hours of January 31st 1945, Red Army troops crossed the Oder and formed the first bridgehead on the territory of today's Germany. Three months later, the Second World War was over. In 1970, a memorial site was established to commemorate the occasion. Since that date, a Russian T-34 tank has been positioned in the town centre. The monument ensemble in Kienitz, which provides information on the events of both world wars, also includes the First World War (1914–1918) monument, the monument to the “victims of 1939–1945” as well as a monument to the bridgehead on the Oder.

Neutrebbin is the largest colonist town in the Oderbruch. A bronze statue in honour of King Frederick II (1712–1786) was erected to mark the 200th anniversary of the Kingdom of Prussia. In the 18th century, the king, also known as “Alter Fritz”, had started to drain the former swamplands in order to gain fertile farmland. Two additional statues are located in Letschin and Neuhardenberg.

The school and prayer house was built in 1764 as an elongated half-timber building in the village centre. It once housed the school, the church, the teacher's flat and also, initially, the apartment of the community shepherd under the same roof.

After several annexes in the 19th century and the addition of a tower, the church interior assumed its current spacious form with the installation of a Mickley organ.

Not far from Wuschewier you can visit the Altfriedland monastery complex. The Klostersee and its adjacent sunbathing lawn invites visitors to swim in summer.

The small half-timber church of Sietzing is situated in the centre of the village. The church had long been in a state of disrepair, with cracks big enough to see through. A support association was founded in 2015, which in just five years collected enough funds to fully refurbish the church in 2020; since then, regular events have made it a popular meeting place. At the edge of the village, on the way to Landstraße 33, there is a small supermarket with regular opening hours.

Letschin is considered the secret capital of the Oderbruch. The Letschiner Heimatstuben, or local history parlour, is a community centre for local history and events and a place to meet. It gives insight into the history of Letschin and its different districts. One exhibition room is dedicated to the poet Theodor Fontane (1819–1898), whose father ran a pharmacy in Letschin. Exhibitions, readings and lectures take place throughout the year. Visitors to the village will also find a variety of shops and restaurants there.

The volunteer fire department is an essential part of the village. It is there not only for fire and hazard prevention, but also fosters a bond within the community. The fire station was built before the hose tower was built in 1912. In addition to housing firefighting equipment, the building also served as the local jail. In 1938, Paul Bettge, member of the district council, was imprisoned here for not voting for the NSDAP in the Reichstag elections. A street in town is now named after him. In their heyday at the beginning of the 20th century, the Simonschen Anlagen were well known. In 1919, the Berlin banker Hugo Simon bought the Schweizerhaus, a tourist restaurant, with all of its associated buildings, and converted the complex into an agricultural model estate. At the same time, the social democrat, pacifist, finance minister and patron of the arts hosted friends and guests from politics, art and culture at this location until he was forced to flee from the National Socialists in 1933. The local history association “Schweizerhaus Seelow” offers guided tours. An exhibition details the life of Hugo Simon.

As Theodor Fontane once described in his first novel, the church ruins of Podelzig are a striking landmark at the southern entrance to the Oderbruch. The church tower houses the burial place of Konrad von Burgsdorff (1595–1652), a prominent military man and politician of his time. His ceremonial coffin is on display in the Neues Museum in Berlin. The viewing platform on the church tower provides sweeping views of the Oderbruch - an ideal starting point for further excursions. EUROPEAN HERITAGE LABEL

In recent years, the municipalities of the Oderbruch, the districts of Märkisch-Oderland and Barnim, as well as companies and private citizens have been working together to attain the European Heritage Label. Under the theme “The Oderbruch – People Making Landscape” the application presents the landscape region as an attractive, open and historically evolving cultural space in the heart of Europe. The Oderbruch is one of the two nominated sites entered by the Federal Republic of Germany in the competition for the European Heritage Label. 2022 was the first time that an entire cultural landscape, the Oderbruch, was awarded the European Heritage Label.

STIFTUNG
ODERBRUCH

The cultural heritage locations are supported by people working in diverse areas of regional culture, and who do so more than 90% of the time on a voluntary basis. Behind every location are committed people who are intimately familiar with the stories about and life in this unique rural landscape. To support the heritage sites, the Stiftung Oderbruch collects donations that can be made to the account below.
